CHICAGO – Next time you approach Navy Pier through the viaduct at Lake Shore Drive and Grand Avenue, you will be stunned by a powerfully colorful mural by L.A.-based graffiti artist Gajin Fujita. Fujita is bringing his eclectic artistry to Navy Pier’s front door with a special mural that is a tribute to Chicago sports teams. The large scale commission is part of BIGart, Navy Pier’s annual free outdoor art exhibit.

Gajin Fujita mixes traditional Japanese imagery with contemporary graffiti techniques that he learned while growing up in Boyle Heights, Los Angeles. He fuses street and pop culture images with dragons, graffiti lettering and cartoons to create his one of a kind pieces.

Fujita received his BFA from Otis College of Art and Design and his MFA from the University of Nevada in Las Vegas.

Gajin Fujita’s intensely colored mural will be the latest piece of art that comes to Navy Pier as part of BIGart, an annual free outdoor art exhibition. This year Navy Pier partnered with contemporary art gallery Gagosian Gallery to bring monumental sculptures and large-scale murals to the Pier that will provide amazing physical impact to visitors.

BIGart is well underway with Roy Lichtenstein’s Brushstroke Group and Anthony Caro’s Blazon already on display. Renowned large-scale sculpture artist Nancy Rubins will also be installing her work Monochrome II Chicago (a massive web of canoes and row boats suspended from a steel armature) for 10 days beginning June 10. Steed Taylor’s “road tattoo” entitled Galloon has also been painted directly on the street in front of Navy Pier that honors military heroes.
